- CSR & Sikhism: Similar to Islam's zakat, Sikhs followed what they called daashaant.

I. INTRODUCTION

CSR (Corporate Social Responsibility) is a popular term in the contemporary management literature, understood largely as a typically western concept based on western values.

But it is neither a western concept nor a product of western values. Yes, the acronym CSR is a coinage of the western management thinkers. The practice of helping is essentially rooted in the Indian value system and references to it can be found in Vedic literature. The only difference being that in the vedas, it is linked to dharma and encompasses the social responsibility of both individuals as well as the businesses under its fold.

Several Indian writers and experts on these subjects who told the view that the foundations of ethical business and CSR were laid ages ago in the Indian sub-continent.[1] Thus, CSR is nothing but an effort by corporate to support the path of dharma. Ancient Hindu philosophy has given the concept of the four Purusharthas, the basic objectives of human life — dharma, artha, kama and moksha. CSR is a manifestation of dharma, the duty of human beings towards society.

The Vedanta philosophy also recognises the concept of trivarga, the triple set, which always have to go together to ensure the happiness of all. The objectives of dharma, artha and kama are to lead society to material progress, cultural development and general welfare of its diverse population.

A. CSR Phases

The first phase of CSR is known for its assistance and humanitarian nature. CSR was influenced by family ideals, values, practises, traditions, culture and religion, as also industrialisation. The capital of capitalists was disbursed on the wellbeing of society, by setting up temples and religious institutions. In times of scarcity and famine these capitalists opened up their granaries for the poor and hungry. The second phase was during the Independence movement. Mahatma Gandhi urged rich industrialists to share their wealth and benefit the poor and marginalised in society. His concept of trusteeship helped socio-economic growth. As per Gandhi, businesses and industries were the 'temples of modern India. In this latter phase CSR converted as a sustainable business strategy. The wave of liberalisation, privatisation and globalisation (LPG), together with a moderately relaxed licensing system, led to a boom in the country's economic development. This further led to an amplified momentum in industrial development, making it likely for companies to donate more towards social responsibility.[2].

II. LITERATURE REVIEW

Muniapan, B., & Satpathy, B. (2013) in their research work mentioned that Bhagavat Gita particularly the notion of 'dharma' (duty) and 'karma' (action) in the framework of CSR. In a summary, the Bhagavat Gita delivers an inside-out method to CSR, which is the development of individual leader's self-conscience of his dharma (duty) and karma (action). Based on the Bhagavat Gita visions, CSR should preferably begin with ISR (Individual Social Responsibility includes Personal Social Responsibility) and to go outside CSR with GSR (Global Social Responsibility). These three social responsibilities are the crucial dharma and karma of corporate leaders. The leaders and the part they play in companies are crucial in safeguarding transparency, good behavior and governance towards the final aim of achieving CSR[3].

Sarah Javed & Mohammad Suhaib(2016) mentioned in their article that Spiritual values have positive effect in monitoring the peril and the fact that spiritually concerned with people act in Godly ways, Spirituality as a control degree for unethical behavior and business have not been adequately discovered[4]. Spirituality spreads beyond ethics to deliver a framework for human development. Spirituality conventionally comprises, but is not limited to, religious beliefs and performs[5] Rozuel C. (2013).

Ghosh, S., Mukherjee, S(2020) Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) and Ethics are obviously allotted low priority in the rush for money, career, fame, power and position both at the individual and administrative levels[6]. Bera, S. (2014) mentioned that It can be said that CSR is an extension or greater measurement of the responsible, moral and ethical nature of a citizen which in some or the other way aids and gives back to the society. Dana, as a concept, figures in Hinduism, Buddhism and Jainism and infers 'unconditional' big-heartedness. In that sense it indicates a state of mind where one's ego is channelled and one does not have any hopes during or after the act of giving[7].

V. DISCUSSION BASED ON ANALYSIS

CSR today is a legal term but for most of the Indians this act of giving back has been deep rooted in their spirituality. Irrespective of religion Indian people has shown kindness, charity, good deeds to the one who in need from very ancient time. By seeing the various contribution by these corporates or philanthropies it is noted that the spirituality in helping has been forefront in India. One side we can see business is growing and other side there are social issues arising. To combat this issue spirituality with ethical values, play significant role in helping in need irrespective of caste, creed, religion, colour or gender.

Setting examples by their noble deeds by the founders or the chairperson of the organization it has directly or indirectly influenced in a larger way. The study also found that many employees within the organization started donating their salaries or kits in those who are in need. This nature of spirituality or practice of values within and in the organization the society has significant impact and indeed, people start inculcating in their lives by doing their responsibility in their surroundings.

VI. CONCLUSION

CSR and spirituality have a deep root in India. In the pandemic time many philanthropies in India has pledged towards the concerns of the society. This study revealed that many companies or entrepreneurs have contributed generously at the crucial need and has been a great support to the society. This act of generosity definitely has a root in the values and religion touch which not only adds value to the personality and also the entity they operate. This act of philanthropy has always been the reflection of a society because in it depended on a division between givers and poor recipients. Not only the wealthy have given even the common man has given in a bigger way in times of need to the society. This behaviour or the sense of spirituality in giving wholeheartedly adds not only prestige of an organization but also humanitarian image among the public and widens organizations influence in the business world. Finally, India has been always setting examples by helping other countries in their spirituality practice and it is a time during this pandemic to reflect and start practice whatever one could be able to do it without any expectations.
