- 2) To analyze the impact of innovative HR practices on employee satisfaction, retention and overall organizational performance in the hospitality industry
- 3) To identify the challenges and opportunities faced by HR managers

III. REVIEW OF LITERATURE

In Hospitality industry, human resource is considered as one of the most valuable assets, and their effective utilization is closely linked to the performance of the organization. A human resource system is a set of distinct but interrelated activities, functions, and processes that are directed at attracting, developing and maintaining, or disposing of a firm's human resources. Although the role of human resource management believes to be more critical for industries and organizations working in services rather than the manufacturing sector but for effective management HRM is equally important for both organizations. Use of new technologies and new manufacturing setup can't be utilized to full strength without required human resource management (HRM) practices. To ensure this, organizations are required to carefully evaluate their practices of HRM and to change them if needed to, ensure the improvement in the performance of employees.

A. Human Resource Management

An enterprise's human assets or, put more conventionally, its human resources tend to be one of the most significant costs for most hospitality enterprises. In most hotels the payroll is the single biggest cost item, whilst in restaurants and bars it is usually second only to material costs. Virtually every management decision affects, to a greater or lesser extent, the people working in the organization. Most decisions are made within an org. (Tourism and hospitality management, Vol.15, issue1, pg-19-43)

B. Human Resource Management In As Personnel Management

Personnel management is an administrative function within an organization that oversees the hiring, organization and support of employee positions. A branch of human resources, personnel management focuses on recruiting the right individuals to fit a position and supporting those already working for the company. This area also functions as a tool for evaluating the hiring process and gaining insight into employee satisfaction. Personnel management professionals work to provide the resources and tools staff members need to thrive in their work environment every day.

C. Human Source Policies

Human resource policies are formal rules and guidelines that businesses put in place to manage their employees. HR procedures, on the other hand, are step-by-step instructions that specify what actions should be taken to comply with these policies. Defining these policies and procedures is one of the core functions of human resource management.

HR procedures often take the form of standard operating procedure (SOP) documents. Here's an example of what a documented HR policy looks like in Nuclino, a unified workspace for all your team's knowledge, docs, and projects – create an account and start documenting your HR policies in one central place:

HR policies cover a variety of different aspects of human resource management, such as:

- 1) Recruitment
- 2) Dress code
- 3) Overtime compensation
- 4) Vacation
- 5) Sick days and personal leave
- 6) Performance evaluation
- 7) Termination

a) Recruitment In HRM

Recruitment can be considered the principal function of the Human Resource department. It is a process that includes sourcing, screening, and shortlisting. It refers to the process of identifying the staffing need and then filling it. The whole process includes identifying, attracting, interviewing, selecting, and onboarding the right candidates for the organization.

b) What is Recruitment Process?

A recruitment process involves activities like identifying different sources of labour supply from which applications of prospective employees may be obtained; evaluating the validity of different sources; choosing the most suitable source; and attracting and motivating prospective candidates to apply for the vacant jobs.

Hospitality industry follows its own recruitment process, but there are some basic steps that are followed by most the organization, which are listed here:

c) Types of Recruitment

For Hospitality industry, recruitment is a crucial part of developing and maintaining an effective and efficient team. A good recruitment strategy will cut down the wastage of time and money, which would have incurred for extensive training and development of unqualified resources. Have you ever thought of, how a recruiter finds the right candidates?

Recruiters use different methods to source, screen, shortlist, and select the resources as per the requirements of the organization. Recruitment types explain the means by which an organization reaches potential job seekers.

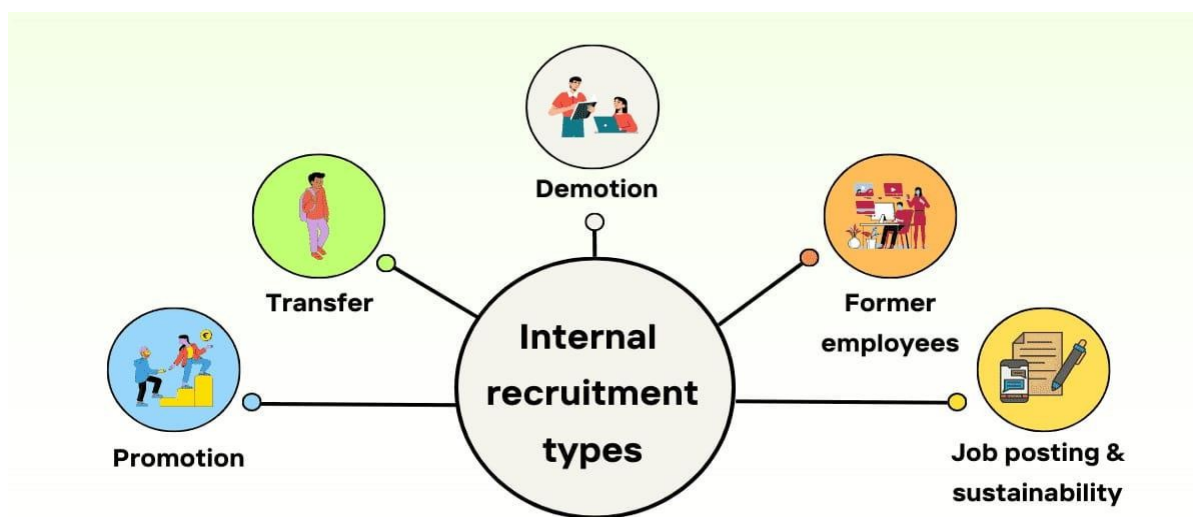

We will shed some light on the secrets of hiring and recruiting methods, used by the recruiters. Recruitment is broadly classified into two different categories – Internal Sources and External

Sources. https://www.tutorialspoint.com/recruitment_and_selection/types_of_recruitment.htm

d) Internal Source Of Recruitment Process

Internal recruitment sources refer to the process of filling job vacancies or positions within an organization by promoting or hiring existing employees. This recruitment source is an effective way for companies to retain their current workforce and encourage employee loyalty and motivation. Many methods of internal hiring are possible, including promotions, transfers, job rotations, and employee recommendations. Organizations can take use of their existing talent pool, boost employee retention rates, and boost employee morale and motivation by offering possibilities for career growth by filling job openings internally.

Here is a list of five popular internal sources of recruitment which are Promotion, Transfer, Demotion, Former Employees, Job Posting, and Suitability. So what are you waiting for? In this article we have given you all in-detail information on internal recruitment types. So stick with us to the end.

- Promotion:

One of the most popular type of internal recruitment source is promoting existing employees. It entails locating and elevating current personnel to senior positions within the company. This can be a terrific method for businesses to keep their best employees and give them chances to advance their careers. Employee NPS, or Net Promoter Score, is often used as a valuable metric to gauge employee satisfaction and engagement in such internal promotion processes.

- Transfer:

Refers to the relocation of an staff from one post department to another within the same Hotel. It is the most important component of internal recruitment. Hotels frequently use competent and experienced workers who are already acquainted with the hotels policies, culture, and operations to fill open positions.

- Demotion:

Moving a person from a higher-level employment role to a lower-level one is a feature of internal recruitment sources. Several factors, including subpar job performance, organizational restructuring, or modifications in business requirements, might cause this. Therefore, the demotion can be difficult to process as it affects their level of job stability, salary, status, and self-worth. Also, it might lead to a modification of responsibilities, tasks, and working conditions. Hotel can maintain their talent pool, encourage employee development, and accomplish their business goals by handling it sensibly, openly, and fairly. Employees can learn from their experiences and continue to make significant contributions to the organization while also learning from their experiences and growing personally.

e) Disadvantages of internal recruitments sources:

Internal recruiting, or elevating current employees to fill unfilled roles, can offer several benefits, including reducing the time and cost spent on hiring and training new employees, fostering employee loyalty, and assuring a strong cultural match. However, it can also have a few typical flaws, including the following:

<https://xobin.com/blog/internal-recruitment-source-in-detail-types-advantages-much-more>

External sources of recruitment lie outside the organisation. These outnumber internal sources.

1) Employment Exchanges:

The National Commission on Labour (1969) observed in its report that in the pre- Independence era, the main source of labour was rural areas surrounding the industries. Immediately after Independence, National Employment Service was established to bring employers and job seekers together. In response to it, the compulsory Notification of A study conducted by Gopalji on 31 organisations throughout the country also revealed that recruitment through employment exchanges was most preferred for clerical personnel i.e., white-collar jobs.

2) Employment Agencies:

In addition to the government agencies, there are a number of private employment agencies who register candidates for employment and furnish a list of suitable candidates from their data bank as and when sought by the prospective employers. ABC Consultants, Datamatics, Ferguson Associates, S B Billimoria, etc. are the popular private employment agencies in our country. Generally, these agencies select personnel for supervisory and higher levels. The main function of these agencies is to invite applications and short list the suitable candidates for the organisation. Of course, the final decision on selection is taken by the representatives of the organisation. At best, the representatives of the employment agencies may also sit on the panel for final selection of the candidates. The employer organisations derive several advantages through this source.

3) Advertisement:

Advertisement is perhaps the most widely used method for generating many applications. This is because its reach is very high. This method of recruitment can be used for jobs like clerical, technical and managerial. The higher the position in the organisation, the more specialized the skills or the shorter the supply of that resource in the labour market, the more widely dispersed the advertisements is likely to be. For example, the search for a top executive might include advertisements in a national daily like 'The Hindu'. Some employers /companies advertise their posts by giving a post box number or the name of some recruiting agency. This is done to particularly keep own identity secret to avoid unnecessary correspondence with the applicants.

4) Professional Associations:

Very often, recruitment for certain professional and technical positions is made through professional associations also called 'Headhunters'. Institute of Engineers, Indian Medical Association, All Indian Management Association, etc., provide placement services for their members. For this, the professional associations prepare either a list of job seekers or publish or sponsor journals or magazines containing advertisements for their members. The professional associations are particularly useful for attracting highly skilled and professional personnel. However, in India, this is not a very common practice and those few that provide such kind of service have not been able to generate a large number of applications.

5) Campus Recruitment:

This is another source of recruitment. Though campus recruitment is a common phenomenon particularly in the American organisations, it has made its mark rather recently. Of late, some organisations such as HLL, HCL, L & T, CitiBank, ANZ Grindlays, Motorola, Reliance etc., in India have started visiting educational and training institutes/campuses for recruitment purposes. Examples of such campuses are the Indian Institutes of Management, Indian Institutes of Technology and the University Departments of Business Management. For this purpose, many institutes have regular placement cells/offices to serve as liaison between the employers and the students.

6) Deputation:

Another source of recruitment is deputation, i.e., sending an employee to another organisation for a short duration of two to three years. This method of recruitment is practiced, in a pretty manner, in the Government Departments and public sector organisations. Deputation is useful because it provides ready expertise and the organisation does not have to incur the initial cost of induction and training.

7) Word-of-Mouth:

Some organisations in India also practice the 'word-of-mouth' method of recruitment. In this method, the word is passed around the possible vacancies or openings in the organisation. Another form of word-of-mouth method of recruitment is "employee-pinching" i.e., the employees working in another organisation are offered an attractive offer by the rival organisations. This method is economic, both in terms of time and money. Some organisations maintain a file of the applications and bio-data sent by job-seekers. These files serve as very handy as and when there is vacancy in the organisation.

8) Raiding or Poaching:

Raiding or poaching is another method of recruitment whereby the rival firms by offering better terms and conditions, try to attract qualified employees to join them. This raiding is a common feature in the Indian. Hotel. For example, several executives of HMT left to join Titan Watch hotel, so also exodus of pilots from the Indian Airlines to join private air taxi operators. Whatever may be the means used to raid rival firms for potential candidates, it is often seen as an unethical practice and not openly talked about. In fact, raiding has become a challenge for the human resource manager.

Evaluation of External Sources:

Like internal sources of recruitment, external sources are mixed of advantages and disadvantages.

The following are the main advantages:

1) Open Process:

Being a more open process, it is likely to attract large number of applicants/ applications. This, in turn, widens its options of selection.

2) Availability of Talented Candidates:

With large pool of applicants, it becomes possible for the organisation to have talented candidates from outside. Thus, it introduces new blood in the organisation.

3) Opportunity to select the best candidates:

With large pool of applicants, the selection process becomes more competitive. This increases prospects for selecting the best candidates.

4) Provides healthy competition:

As the external members are supposed to be more trained and efficient. With such a background, they work with positive attitude and greater vigour. This helps create healthy competition and conducive work environment in the organisation. However, the external sources of recruitment suffer from certain disadvantages too:

These are:

5) Expensive and Time Consuming:

This method of recruitment is both expensive and time consuming. There is no guarantee that organisation will get good and suitable candidates.

6) Unfamiliarity with the Organisation:

As candidates come from outside the organisation, they are not familiar with the tasks, job nature and the internal scenario of the organisation.

7) Discourages the Existing Employees:

Existing employees are not sure to get promotion. This discourages them to work hard. This, in turn, boils down to decreasing productivity of the organisation. Now the question arises is: Where from can an organisation recruit potential job seekers? Table 6.1 offers some guidance. The source that is used should reflect the local labour market, the type or level of position, and the size of the organisation.

Hotel executives need to devise a well-managed and robust talent management strategy that creates a culture of ongoing development, high performance, and organization-wide commitment to providing top-notch service in a practical way. In this article, we are going to examine the value of talent management and how hoteliers can include high levels of customer centricity in the hospitality industry for optimum results.

Some innovative techniques in Human Resource Management that are particularly relevant to the hospitality industry include:-

- a) Personalized training and development program: Personalized training is the key to employee success in the workplace. There should be no "one size fits all" when it comes to training, simply because there is no "one size fits all" approach to learning. There is an urgent need to improve learning and development in the workplace due to highly competitive industries, changing workforce demographics, and the need to constantly re-skill. <https://1huddle.co/blog/personalized-training-development/>
- b) Recruitment and staffing – In this section respondents were questioned about recruitment planning, its extension, but also what strategies are in place to reduce turnover. Concerning HR planning only 38,5% of respondents reported having a recruitment plan in place and 52,6% of these plans extended for only one year, 31,6% between one and three years and only 15,8% extended for more than five years. Literature review indicates that HR planning is one of the most important aspects of HRM, indispensable basis for all other practices. It must regard medium and long-range terms in order to conciliate organizations goals and employee's needs and perspectives. Conventionally the answers to these questions will be provided by job analysis, the job description and person specification, which allow the candidates to gauge their chances of being appointed.

c) Retention of employee: Human resource people must be aware of all the laws that affect the workplace. An HRM professional might work with some of the HRM Retention involves keeping and motivating employees to stay with the organization. Compensation is a major factor in employee retention, but there are other factors as well. Ninety percent of employees leave a firm for the following reasons:

- The job they are performing
- Challenges with their manager
- Poor fit with organizational culture
- Poor workplace environment

Despite this, 90 percent of managers think employees leave as a result of pay. As a result, managers often try to change their compensation packages to keep people from leaving, when compensation isn't the reason they are leaving at all. "Retention and Motivation (Page 189)" and "Employee Assessment (Page 321)" discuss some strategies to retain the best employees based on these four factors. <https://chat.openai.com/c/1d0f73fb-6d2a-4a38-ba59-e7fb0bf64313>.

Innovative technology in HRM

- 1) Data Analytics: Utilizing data to make informed HR decisions, such as predictive analytics for talent acquisition and workforce planning.
- 2) Artificial Intelligence (AI): Implementing AI for tasks like resume screening, chatbots for initial candidate interactions, and predictive analytics for employee retention.
- 3) Employee Wellness Programs: Focusing on holistic well-being, offering programs like mindfulness workshops, fitness incentives, and mental health support.
- 4) Gamification: Introducing game-like elements to training and development programs to enhance engagement and skill acquisition.
- 5) Remote Work Strategies: Developing policies and tools for effective remote work, considering flexible schedules, virtual collaboration tools, and employee well-being in virtual environments.
- 6) Agile HR: Adopting agile methodologies to enhance flexibility and responsiveness in HR processes, particularly in areas like project management and performance reviews.
- 7) Personalized Learning: Providing customized learning paths for employees, utilizing e-learning platforms and adaptive technologies.
- 8) Employee Experience Design: Applying principles of design thinking to enhance the overall employee experience, from recruitment to offboarding.

These innovative approaches help HRM adapt to changing workplace dynamics and contribute to creating a more efficient and employee-centric work environment.

HRD Practices-A Glimpse

HRD has assumed increasing role and significance over the last few years and the management looks upon this activity as the one mainly responsible for coping with changes.

Not only has HRD function been made responsible for recruiting and developing the individuals in the organisation, but the concern is also to ensure that this precious asset is not lost to the organisation, particularly since due to competition, better pay and perks are available to lure away talented personnel. (C.V. Subramaniam, Human resource management chpt-26 pg-111)

Dwyer & Edwards (2009) lastly argue that the hotel companies must start innovative employee screening process at the time of recruitment as this will enable the organization to recruit the trait-oriented employees and also this will increase the employee satisfaction and employee retention resulting into improved satisfaction of guests.
